Proludic has forged a strong relationship with Brighton & Hove City Council, having worked on multiple of their playground refurbishments over many years. As a trusted partner, the Council approached Proludic to revive some of the equipment at Stoneham Park, a much-loved and well-used playground in Hove.

The Council wanted to upgrade the playground and refurbish existing equipment wherever possible. Proludic proposed a range of small but meaningful improvements to address issues raised by the local community.

This imagery, alongside a new bespoke Grafic Games dolphin springer, reflects the marine-themed murals on the surrounding walls, giving the playground its own distinctive character, look and feel. This process is inexpensive and has helped inject new life into the existing unit at minimal cost to the Council.

Other improvements included creating a new wetpour mound with recycled plastic sleeper steps, leading to a double-width slide. A playhouse was also introduced to provide shade for younger children, alongside new balancing equipment allowing children to 'play on the way' as they move around the play area.

A fun hexagonal seating area provides somewhere to sit while doubling as a raised balance trail. The bench is etched with an 'Incy Wincy Spider' tale, offering whimsical and educational content for little ones as they wobble their way around the unit.

Through these carefully considered, low-cost improvements, Proludic helped refresh Stoneham Park while retaining and enhancing much of its existing equipment. This site evidences how delivering bespoke features and additional play value does not mean there is always the need for a complete refurbishment.
